

Above—French sailors on board a submarine chaser are seen throwing overboard a special machine, in the nature of a detectaphone, that records the presence of submarines.

Copyright, International Film Service.

At right—Quentin, the youngest son of Col. Roosevelt, an army aviator, probably killed at Chateau Thierry in a running fight with German fliers.

Copyright, International Film.

Our sailors abroad have a lot of hard work, but they find time to amuse themselves. Even without girls they enjoy waltzing on the deck.

Copyright, International Film.

Another view of life on an American warship in foreign waters. Our young men pose for the camera and their smiling faces reflect the spirit within. Hun submarines beware!

Copyright, International Film.

This is a dangerous job. If one of these torpedoes should explode it would raise something of a commotion. It is being lowered from a supply ship to be taken to a destroyer in British waters.

Copyright, International Film.

Private W. G. Guyton, the first American soldier to be killed on German soil, has received a posthumous award of the Croix de Guerre.

Photo by International Film.

The woman waiter has really arrived in New York. She is now seen in the clubs, the restaurants, the hotels and every other eating place. It won't be long before they cease to be a novelty. This picture shows one of them at the Waldorf.

Copyright, Press Illustrating Service.

The men on board the U. S. hospital ship Mercy are seen enjoying their favorite newspaper, THE EVENING SUN. Every time the vessel reaches a home port somebody hustles out to a newsboy and the sailors find out what is going on.